Office of the President

Dear Alumni and Members of the Monmouth University Family,

My time at Monmouth is, unfortunately, winding down rapidly. Soon I will be off to Florida to start a new phase of my life as a retiree. Of course, my husband, who has been living alone for the past seven years has a new career for me which includes being a full-time housewife. However, I intend to sandwich that career around golf, tennis and a lot of dog and beach walking. Monmouth will always be on my mind, and I am delighted that my successor, Admiral Gaffney, is such a talented, experienced and respected man. He and his wife, Linda, will, I know, lead Monmouth to new heights of excellence.

These past ten years have seen profound changes in our University - the evolution of a small, local college to a regional university with a broad array of liberal arts and professional undergraduate programs capped by a growing and expanding graduate school which now offers 17 degree programs.

The spirit of Monmouth has not changed. We still pride ourselves on the care, concern and support which we give to every student, to help them fulfill their ambitions and unlock their talents.

I am proud and honored that the Alumni Association made me an honorary alumna of Monmouth University in 1997. I shall always be one of you and delighted to be in such good company. I have found that those of you whom I have been fortunate enough to meet come from all walks of life, with amazingly varied, yet successful and satisfying careers. Most importantly, however, you have not forgotten the value of friendship and family nor have you neglected your citizenship responsibilities. Monmouth alumni are just good people.

Keep in touch with each other. Use your Monmouth family as a source of support. Visit the campus often. I know Admiral Gaffney will be as glad to see you and bask in the reflected glory of your successes as I was. Most of all, do what you can to help other young people have the life changing experience you had at Monmouth.

Thank you all, faculty, staff, administrators, students and alumni, for giving me the opportunity to serve this truly great University. It is the capstone of my career and the fulfillment of my life ambition. I will never forget the kindness you have shown me and the warm welcome you gave me ten years ago. You folded me right into your family and I have felt the security of knowing that we have taken this decade long journey together - a journey which has given us all pride and joy. I feel that wherever I go, whatever I may do in this new phase of my life, I will not be alone. I will always have my Monmouth family.

My love goes with all of you into a bright future.

RECEIVING THE DISTINCTION OF

ON FRIDAY, MARCH 24, 1995
AT 10:40 A.M.

President Chairman, Board of Trustees

STAFFORD'S STAMP WILL ENDURE

Armed with a vision of the possibilities that lay before Monmouth College in 1993, Rebecca Stafford assumed the presidency of the small, local institution and led its transformation toward regional distinction. Employing a generous portion of professional experience and personal charm, she persuaded the University community to join in this undertaking and together they have shaped Monmouth into a university noted for the excellence of its academic programs and the quality of its teaching.

Among the challenges confronting Dr. Stafford upon her arrival were attracting and keeping students, maintaining the rigor and quality of the curriculum, keeping top-flight faculty in the classroom while giving them time to do research, and making each student's experience "something more than a cash for credentials transaction." Nevertheless, she was sure that Monmouth had the essential electricity, the nexus, between faculty and students that makes the learning experience exciting and vital.

Much of Dr. Stafford's ambition for the College was embodied in the Monmouth 2000 vision, which she articulated in her September 1993 Opening Convocation speech. "Monmouth University strives to be an academic community offering distinctive curricular programs of exceptional quality, within an affordable private institution combining modern facilities with a gracious historic campus and a professional environment supported by alumni, led by a dedicated Board of Trustees, and recognized in the region as a center of learning." She wanted Monmouth to attain university status, to become an institution known for the rigor of its academic programs, the excellence of its faculty, its expanding role in the region, and the friendly and collegial atmosphere of the campus community.

From that vision, the University adopted a strategic plan which dramatically increased enrollment, and provided the financial resources to carry out an ambitious agenda of improvements to the academic and co-curricular programs and to rebuild the campus with state of the art facilities.

Implementing the plan, Monmouth more than doubled the number of full time undergraduates, increased the graduate enrollment by 40 percent and increased the net revenue more than threefold, providing the resources to double the number of full time faculty members, increase the support for the co-curricular activities and fund new academic programs.

Monmouth's designation as a comprehensive university by the State of New Jersey in 1995 was a significant milestone and served as a launching pad for numerous other institutional quality enhancements. Three new schools were formed, the Edward G. Schlaefer School, the Graduate School and the School of Education. New professorships including the Wayne D. McMurray Chair in Social Ethics were founded. The School of Business Administration was accredited and the Marjorie K. Unterberg School of Nursing and Health Studies was established.

In 1993, after a year of preparation, Monmouth premiered its new intercollegiate football team, and the new football stadium became a gathering point for students, alumni, parents and fans on Saturday afternoons in the fall.

Edison Science Building was renovated and its classrooms and laboratories were upgraded; two new academic buildings - Robert E. McAllan Hall and the Jules L. Plangere, Jr. Center for Communication and Instructional Technology were constructed. Campus beautification included restoration of the Erlanger Gardens and the creation of the Lois Blonder Sculpture Garden. New parking lots were opened and campus traffic patterns altered. Last summer, a pedestrian passageway beneath Cedar Avenue opened, providing safe passage and linking student residence halls, the Health Center and Library with the main campus.

Currently under construction, the University library is being renovated and expanded, while plans for a new Multipurpose Activity Center are moving forward.

As a result of all these improvements, Monmouth was able to attract better prepared students for whom the University is their first choice. In fact, Monmouth has become so popular that a new admissions deadline system had to be imposed and the freshman class is always full with a waiting list before the

May 1st deadline. The University has also attracted new faculty with outstanding credentials, men and women who combine the latest in teaching methods with first rate scholarship to give graduates a fine liberal arts education combined with excellent career preparation.

With Dr. Stafford at the helm, the University has undergone a remarkable transformation in size and academic reputation while remaining welcoming to students and community. Students are challenged academically while respected for their endeavors and their opinions. Graduation rates have improved and a dramatically increased sense of loyalty to the institution is evident among students and alumni matching the high morale of the faculty, administration and staff.

During her tenure as Monmouth's president, Dr. Stafford was an active member of the NCAA Men's and Women's Basketball Issues committees and chaired the NCAA Women's Basketball Issues Committee from 2000 to 2002. She also served on NCAA Peer Review committees at St. John's and Georgetown Universities and Sienna College. She has held several offices including board chair of the Association of Independent Colleges and Universities of New Jersey. From 1995 to 1999, Dr. Stafford was president of the Northeast Athletic Conference.

In addition, Dr. Stafford has served on the boards of several organizations and commissions including the NAICU Commission on Campus Concerns, the Independent College Fund, the Institutional Decision Making and Resource Planning Academy, and the Society for College and University Planning. Her achievements have been recognized on numerous occasions including the National Conference for Community Justice Humanitarian Award, Outstanding Women in New Jersey designation in 2001, a Women of Leadership Award from the Monmouth Council of Girl Scouts in 1995, and the Salute to Policymakers Award by Executive Women of New Jersey in 1994.

Dr. Stafford's community service included serving as a trustee of Monmouth Medical Center. She was also a member of the Five State Regional Board of First Union Bank, and served as a director of First Fidelity Bank of New Jersey.

Throughout her career, Dr. Stafford has been sought after as a presenter at Wilson Hall, where the president's office is located, was decorated for a house warming upon Dr. Stafford's arrival in the summer of 1993.

Basketball Fans

President Stafford has been a huge fan of Monmouth athletics and attended as many games as her schedule permitted. She and Willard Van Hazel (Bill), her husband of 30 years, were in the stands when Monmouth played Duke in March 2001.

During her tenure as Monmouth's president, Dr. Stafford was an active member of the NCAA Men's and Women's Basketball Issues committees and chaired the NCAA Women's Basketball Issues Committee from 2000 to 2002. She also served on NCAA Peer Review committees at St. John's and Georgetown universities and Sienna College.

President Stafford and her Cabinet

President Stafford is surrounded by members of her Cabinet, the team of administrators who served with her for her entire term. professional conferences, a panelist at seminars and a keynote speaker on topics related to university administration, educational quality, business administration, women's professional concerns and financial planning in academe. She is the author of numerous scholarly articles that were published in journals and magazines.

Committed to personal as well as professional excellence, Dr. Stafford adheres to a rigid regimen of exercise and physical training. She has become a regular in the campus Fitness Center and is often observed walking on campus with her dog, Libby. Forgoing tennis for golf several years ago, she pursues this new undertaking with a competitive spirit and respectable skill for someone who came to the sport a short while ago.

When she is re-established in her permanent residence on Amelia Island near Jacksonville, Florida, with husband Willard Van Hazel and the family's cadre of Labrador retrievers, Libby, the youngest, Bruce the elder statesman, and Hilda, the adopted service dog raised in the Monmouth residence halls, golf will undoubtedly consume much of her free time.

Looking back over her career in education, Dr. Stafford must sometimes secretly remind herself that she's not in Kansas anymore. The young woman whose parents reluctantly permitted their only child to travel half way across the country in 1954 to enroll in Radcliffe College may never have dreamed of the places she would go and the accomplishments she would amass - deanships and professorships, author, lecturer, conference speaker...and with Dr. Stafford freely acknowledging that her time at Monmouth was the capstone of her professional life, presidencies of three colleges and universities. MU

“Mission: As we evolved, it became clear that we would be a special kind of university, emphasizing teaching rather than research as our primary mission. We have been known from the beginning of our history as a place where students worked with caring faculty in small classes, where they were encouraged and supported to achieve their career ambitions. We have always balanced the need to enlarge students’ intellectual horizons with a concern for the growth of the whole person and the development of students into professionals in their chosen fields.”

“Mission: This planned growth had to be considered in the context of quality improvement. Our goal was not merely to be a university, but a university of regional distinction. After all, the purpose of growth was to offer a higher quality education. In our mission statement, we commit ourselves to provide a learning environment that enables men and women to pursue their educational goals, to reach their full potential, to determine the direction of their lives, and to contribute actively to their community and society.”

September 11, 1996 - Opening Convocation Speech

Education: The disinterest of students in liberal arts creates an almost unresolvable conundrum for faculty and administrators. We know that critical thinking and problem solving skills we learned in our liberal arts courses are far and away the most valuable legacy of our undergraduate years. We also know that liberal arts exposed us to a wide range of thinking and experiences which are beyond the scope of personal engagement. When the specific subject matter is long forgotten or outdated, the legacy of liberal arts study is still with us — it pruned open our minds. However, we cannot convince prospective students for whom the economic investment in education for a career is uppermost in their minds that the study of the liberal arts is more valuable than the fields which they perceive to be pre-professional.

Technology: The Monmouth University task force studying technology has not contemplated increasing 'productivity' by substituting technology for classroom experiences at the undergraduate level. We have set the parameters of consideration at the undergraduate level to finding ways in which technology can add richness to the classroom experience, allow students to explore phenomena which would be impossible without computer models, and use technology for practice and for manipulation of data. We also expect that students will use the new technology to communicate with professors, to gather information for research papers, and to familiarize themselves with material they have missed in class or need to review. Technology can enhance, but cannot substitute for good teaching.

Education: A college education is an investment for a future life — a life of work, family and community; a life of the body and mind; a life which includes other neighborhoods, regions, and countries. Tomorrow's college graduates should be prepared for constant change, ready to redefine and reconfigure their skills, their ambitions and their careers to fit into the new century. We can prepare them for that unknown world by working together to achieve the vision we set for ourselves five years ago.

“Education: The tension here is to set a course for the students that is neither too highly weighted toward predigested knowledge (after all, sometime the student must be able to do this on his own) nor too laissez faire - letting single students or groups of students flail about and present conglomerations of information for themselves or their classmates as if it is knowledge. . . we must be ever mindful that our purpose at Monmouth is to enhance the acquisition of knowledge, not allow substitutions of collected information to serve as knowledge.”

“Students: Students cannot absorb and use knowledge if they cannot read quickly and accurately. They cannot analyze, and synthesize information if they cannot put thoughts together in a coherent statement. They cannot communicate ideas if they cannot be understood. . . It is for all of us, faculty, staff and administration, to teach and practice these basic skills our students will need. Our entire writing initiative is based upon this realization.”

“ Mission: We have a higher purpose than to provide a baby sitting service and credentials in return for tuition. We have an obligation to the future employers of our graduates to be certain they are as well prepared for the variety of jobs and careers they will pursue in their lifetimes. We have an obligation to society to turn out responsible citizens and we have a responsibility to our entire community to maintain our academic integrity and not cheapen our degree. We have an opportunity to enhance and elevate our University which we should seize in the coming years. ”

Education: Knowledge is not a commodity to be acquired. The raw materials of knowledge, information, must be ascertained and assessed while the inevitable junk must be discarded — something that our librarians help our students accomplish every day. But even good information is not knowledge. It must be molded into knowledge with the help of teachers.

September 13, 2000 - Opening Convocation Speech

Education: Modern universities strive to be a community of learners, but they do more than hone the intellectual abilities of teenagers. They also serve as parents, churches, and small communities. They provide homes, food, health care, and activities for students. They help these teenagers to grow up and mature as responsible adults.

Athletics: Our athletic program is not big-time. We don't have to be concerned with the governance implications of highly compensated coaches and the influence of shoe companies and crazed boosters and alumni more powerful than the trustees. Our admission standards and practices are the same for athletes and non-athletes and our faculty conduct their classes and grade students without regard to their athletic eligibility. We graduate our athletes at rates higher than the rest of the student body and only rarely do the NBA or the NFL scouts come to Monmouth. Not to toot our horn, but our student athletes are real models of the kind of athletic program the NCAA and the Knight Commission would like to see.

A LETTER FROM THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES TO PRESIDENT STAFFORD

Rebecca Stafford, Ph.D.
President
Monmouth University

Spring 2003

Dear Becky:

All of us who have enjoyed the privilege and opportunity to serve our institution under your leadership join in saluting you upon your retirement.

A little over ten years ago, some of us shared the excitement of participating in the selection process that brought you to Monmouth. We knew we had successfully attracted an experienced, thoughtful, capable, knowledgeable and forthright person and were so pleased that you agreed to become our 6th President. What we did not know was how dynamic a leader you would prove to be!

Today's Monmouth University is a vastly different place than the Monmouth College that greeted you July 1, 1993. Year after year with strategic vision, segment by segment, program by program, building by building, you have etched your permanent impression on this place. You have dealt successfully with virtually every constituency, never shirking from the tough situations and have illustrated diplomacy and confidence in your every activity. Each of us as a Trustee has been individually challenged to help you better Monmouth, yet you have encouraged us through making us your partners in seeking our input and support in those areas in which they have been appropriate. Your ability to build a team and have it flourish has been remarkable, and we are collectively fortunate to forever count ourselves as participants on the Stafford team.

We appreciate your candor, your business sense, your friend-raising, and particularly, your recognition and definition of Monmouth's mission as it has evolved. Our faculty and academic stature have been materially strengthened on your watch. You have truly expanded and enhanced the reputation of Monmouth University and have crafted a strong foundation for its future progress and development under your successor's guidance.

To paraphrase a well-known song, "What a Difference a Decade Makes!" As we wish you well in your future endeavors and challenges, please know how proud we are that you have played such an important role in the history of Monmouth University. We sincerely hope that you are justifiably proud of and rewarded by what you have achieved and created for the present and future of Monmouth.

Sincerely,
The Monmouth University

CHOOSING TO ENRICH THE RESOURCES OF TOMORROW

In my 10 years as president, the campus has become my home, and the goals established for the University have become my goals. Monmouth is different now than it was when I arrived, and it will continue to change in the years and decades ahead. Officially my role at Monmouth concludes on June 30.

However, I won't be satisfied being part of Monmouth's past. I also want to be a part of this University's future. By committing to establish a series of charitable gift annuities, my link to this campus and the people who populate it day by day will endure. During my lifetime, I'll receive annual income from the annuities, and the remainder will pass to the University for the benefit of future Monmouth students and faculty.

I'm proud of what we have accomplished together. Now, my gift annuities will enrich the resources that future generations will use to improve the Monmouth of tomorrow.
